Amount not disclosed

No payment disclosed. World Liberty says it receives no compensation from the agreement. The potential value to the family is wider adoption of USD1, a stablecoin in which the family has a financial interest. About six months after the memorandum, Pakistani officials told Al Jazeera (Jul 3, 2026) there had been no USD1 pilot, no licenses and no known USD1 transactions.

WHAT HAPPENED

On January 14, 2026, Pakistan signed a memorandum of understanding with SC Financial Technologies, a Delaware company run by World Liberty co-founder Zach Witkoff that co-owns the USD1 stablecoin brand with World Liberty. The agreement, announced by Pakistan's Virtual Asset Regulatory Authority, covers exploring USD1 for cross-border payments. Pakistan's finance minister signed it during Witkoff's visit; a World Liberty delegation met the prime minister, and a delegation led by Witkoff met the army chief.

World Liberty says it receives no compensation from the agreement. Any value to the family would come from wider use of USD1. Bloomberg has reported that USD1 balances can generate interest income for the family (see the MGX entry).

Zach Witkoff's father, Steve Witkoff, is the president's special envoy. White House counsel says he is divesting from World Liberty and does not take part in matters affecting his finances.
